[...] fragmento texto de Florencia Malbrán, Vacío – Vuoto
Exposición Galería Zavaleta Lab, Buenos Aires 2009

En Galpón Colón, el segundo ensayo fotográfico, Minelli retrata las escenografías sin uso que el Teatro Colón deposita en un galpón de la zona sur de Buenos Aires. Se trata de decorados vacíos de su función, porque ahora están fuera de escena y ya no prestan auxilio en representación lírica alguna. Allí, acumulados en aquel depósito, conviven elementos sobre los que es difícil decir qué son, o mejor, qué fueron. Las fotografías de Minelli ofrecen consuelo a ese desencanto, construyendo con los decorados desechados una secuencia de dramáticas geometrías. Hay puertas y muebles que forman vías y caminos. Hay también varillas que ofrecen puntos de fuga vertiginosos. Por un lado, la balaustrada de un balcón se las ha ingeniado para permanecer suspendida. Por otro, un árbol de utilería todavía se mantiene en pie y extiende lejos sus ramas. Los restos de las gradas en las que alguna vez se ubicó una orquesta trazan curvas y flechas, e incluso simulan la ondulada silueta de un violonchelo.

Minelli busca retener estos elementos, impedir que se salgan de la escena, que se muevan, se eliminen, pierdan en la espera del depósito. Más que presentar materiales y estructuras diferentes, cada una de sus fotos abre una ventana al ambiente enrarecido del galpón. En ese lugar, a través de las fotos, los decorados desplazados, o los que quedaron entre bambalinas, regresan al centro de las tablas. Nuevamente Minelli habla del pasado y su actualidad. Como ocurre en Playas, Galpón Colón gira en torno al vacío que deja aquello que se va. Minelli lamenta ese hueco, pero lo recupera también como una especie de mirilla por la cual observar el pasaje del tiempo. En sus fotografías, el vacío es la apertura que permite ver el hoy.

Minelli's most recent series, GALPON COLON, consists of images taken in the Barrio Piedra Buena, one of the most impoverished areas of Buenos Aires, a district long plagued by drugs and violent crime. Fascinated by the way of life in that part of the city, Minelli first visited this same barrio for his series entitled "Zona Sur". These portraits of young people of the neighbourhood are friends whom Minelli first came to know before ever proposing to take their pictures. It was in this manner that he was able to gain access to intimate social moments of the community never exposed to outsiders. In achieving his subjects' trust Minelli was able to reveal a world to which audiences would never have been given entry otherwise. His is the privileged eye able to give witness to the spirit of a closed society.

In GALPON COLON viewers are given access to the storage room for stage props of Buenos Aires' Colon Theatre in the middle of the Barrio Piedra Buena. The pictures mediate a quiet that is deceitful, in view of the turmoil on the streets and in the houses of the quarter. The photographer and the spectator are alone with the stage furniture and scaffolding, as if waiting out a storm in a sheltered harbour. Minelli photographs his subjects as they are, without posturing the subject or fashioning the final print, and yet he still manages to capture images that are incredibly elegant. However, if the picture was only displaying surface beauty, Minelli insists that "the goal of my work would be missed." The misery of daily existence in the area is absent in the Colon prop room, replaced with an underlying serenity brought about by the shapes, lines, textures, colours, and light of the space. Almost abstract in their patterns, Minelli's images contribute another layer of perspective upon the life of the Barrio Piedra Buena.

Gian Paolo Minelli's GALPON COLON strikes a unique balance between a calming fascination with the aesthetic details of geometric abstraction and an uneasy awareness of the dark reality just beyond the stage door.
